

If I continue to hold stock in a company after a significant negative disclosure, will I be precluded from participating in a settlement?

No, you can still participate in a settlement. In the event that you continue to hold the stock, your damages will be limited to the difference between the price paid for the stock and the mean trading price of that security during the 90 day period following the company's negative disclosure.